

A man with long brown hair, wearing a light blue t-shirt, is crouching in a field of dry, brown grass and twigs. He is looking intently at a dark-colored snake that is coiled among the debris. The background is a blurred natural setting with more dry vegetation. There are two dark blue circular graphic elements: one in the top right corner and one in the bottom left corner, which contains the text.

Keynote Topic

Only Knowledge Can Abolish Fear

Kurdt has put himself in countless death-defying situations most humans would never dare to enter into, in the name of discovery and learning.

Sharing stories of his immense adventures in the wild, Kurdt describes handling the most deadly wild snakes on the planet in hostile locations accompanied by terrified film crews on set of his internationally acclaimed TV show Deadliest Snakes of South Africa.

Kurdt recalls how patience and mental fortitude were of the utmost importance from his experiences tracking cheetahs, swimming with killer whales and sharks, and working with black rhinos deep in harsh African landscapes to document the intricate lives of beautiful creatures for National Geographic.

Kurdt brings to life the struggles and lessons on living illuminated by his time building, and residing in, his Afro Montagne forest survivalist dwellings over 2020 lockdown, which became a news sensation.

From constant innovation and adaptation, mastering your environment and circumstance, and having a thirst for a life beyond the conventional – Kurdt is constantly reminded that the treasures of existence are a few feet beyond the boundaries of comfort.
